

GamJams.net: Where Mid-Atlantic bike racers roll

Race Calendar

Directories

Sponsored Teams

GamJams Ambassador Network

Contact / Contribute

ADVERTISE

Weekly Picks, Promos & Premes: 12-4-08

Weekly Picks, Promos & Premes presents some of the new products that amateur racers like us will either lust after, or at least be able to afford. Designed to be a good mix of the rational and the aspirational, it will help you save money on gear - and then show you where to spend those savings.

WheelBuilder.com Aero Disc Covers

When it comes to time trials, you can buy speed. It's sad but true. The well-heeled have a competitive advantage in the race against truth. But there is hope for the rest of us who aren't TT specialists, but still enjoy the slippery speed a rear disc affords. WheelBuilder.com Aero Disc Covers bolt right onto your race wheels. They're pictured here with Zipp's but WheelBuilder also makes sizes to work with any rear wheel - including your PowerTap Mavic Open Pro. Go from Zero to Aero in only $65.

MSRP $65 - $95

More at www.wheelbuilder.com

Saris Wheel Arch

Like a lot of people, I shredded my handlebar tape at Poolesville. But it wasn't because I crashed on the dirt or overshot the sandy turn and was flung headlong into the ditch. After the race, my bike was leaning against the GamJams Team Minivan. A gust of wind caught it and toppled it to the ground. It was a totally avoidable incident if I had one of these - the Saris Wheel Arch. Pull it out of your car, slot your bike into it, and you have an elegant solution for protecting your ride, keeping scratches off your car, and inviting photoshoots of your speedy steed. Or use it indoors where you park to keep your bike upright and your walls unscuffed. The width is adjustable to accommodate road or MTBs, and you can even link multiple units together so your whole team can park handlebar-to-handlebar on game day. How pro is that?

MSRP $26.99

More at www.saris.com

